Throughout the world, museums allow people to explore new cultures and topics through their collections and exhibitions. Check out this comprehensive list of the best museums and galleries throughout the world with one-of-a-kind displays that educate and inspire.

Musée D'Orsay in Paris

The Musée D'Orsay, once a railway station, houses an internationally famous collection of Impressionist art and other Western pieces from 1848 and 1914. Started in 1986, the white limestone walls are now home to some of the most notable artworks in France, like sculptures by Auguste Rodin and paintings by Paul Gauguin.

Zeitz Museum of Contemporary Art Africa in Cape Town

With the help of design firm Heatherwick Studio, the once century-old grain silo (谷粮仓) in the heart of Cape Town transformed into a museum which hosts international events and exhibitions to provide an intercultural look into the world of African art. Works from revolutionary artists such as Kudzanai Chiurai of Zimbabwe and Wangechi Mutu of Kenya decorate the nine floors of the museum.

Bangkok National Museum

The first national museum in Thailand, whose structures can date back to 1782, when they served as the palace of Prince Wang Na. Nearly 100 years later, the grounds were transformed into a museum with three differently themed galleries: a Thai History Gallery, an Archaeological and Art History collection, and a Decorative Arts and Ethnological Collection.

The National Palace Museum in Taipei

The National Palace Museum included artwork from the Ming and Qing dynasties. The permanent collection features nearly 700,000 pieces of imperial artifacts and includes calligraphic works by Tang Yin.

For the first time, scientists have provided clear evidence that tropical tree lifespans(寿命) decrease above a critical temperature threshold. Findings published in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences show that across the tropics, tree lifespans decrease for temperatures above 25°C.

As temperatures are rising rapidly across large parts of the tropics, the tree death rate is likely to rise in most parts of the tropics, including the Amazon, Pantanal and Atlantic forests, with possible effects on animal habitats, air quality and carbon stocks. Although tropical rainforests account for only 7% of all land, they are home to about 50% of all animals and plant species, and approximately 50% of forest carbon stocks on earth. Thus, small changes in the functioning of tropical forests can significantly change the atmospheric levels of CO₂-the most important greenhouse gas caused by humans.

- C. They are not as strongly affected by temperature.
 - D. They grow much slower than those in cooler regions.

31. What will dry conditions lead to, according to the passage?

- A. Tropical trees dying much faster.
- B. Tropical trees releasing more heat.
- C. Tropical trees catching fire more often.
- D. Tropical trees standing hotter temperatures.

D

Google's parent company is winding down a project that used high-lying balloons to provide Internet services to hard-to-reach areas of the world.

The project, known as Loon, started in 2011. It was managed by Alphabet Inc. It aimed to bring connectivity to areas of the world where ground-based cell towers (手机信号塔) were too expensive or too difficult to set up.

But Loon was unable to reduce costs enough to make its business model run, the project's leader, Alastair Westgarth, said in a blog post. "While we've found a number of willing partners along the way, we haven't found a way to get the costs low enough to build a long-term, competitive business," Westgarth said.

Loon's shutdown isn't surprising, economists said.

Loon's technology sent gas-filled balloons the size of tennis courts into the air. They usually stay at heights of around 60,000 to 75,000 feet. There, onboard communications equipment sent Internet signals back down to earth. The system was able to offer mobile coverage to an area 200 times larger than a traditional ground-based cell tower. However, a carrier would need several balloons at once, each would cost tens of thousands of dollars and last only about five months.

Alphabet wasn't alone in running projects aimed at offering Internet connection to hard-to-reach areas. Companies such as Amazon.com Inc. and Elon Musk's SpaceX have been making efforts to provide Internet connection in such places, using satellites in near Earth orbit.

Over the last few years, Loon's technology has proved successful in some suffering communities. In 2017, the project sent balloons into the skies above Puerto Rico after a terrible hurricane damaged the island's communications facilities. Two years later, soon after a 7.8 earthquake struck parts of Peru, Loon's balloons began to provide the locals with mobile connectivity.

Rich Devaul, a founder of the project, said the need for mobile connectivity was rapidly rising recently. This made cell towers more cost-effective than he had expected ten years ago, reducing the need for Loon, “The problem got solved faster than we thought,” he said in an interview.

32. Why is Alphabet shutting down Loon?

- A. Many local communities disliked the project.
- B. It was too costly to continue the project.
- C. The technology was no longer advanced.
- D. It was too difficult to set up the systems.

33. How does the author introduce Loon's technology in paragraph 5?

- A. By describing difficulties in using it.
- B. By providing research results about it.
- C. By explaining its advantages and disadvantages.
- D. By showing its differences from traditional ones.

34. What can we learn about the technology of Loon?

- A. It helped areas hit by natural disasters.
- B. It suited the need of developed countries.
- C. It was unable to work in terrible weather.
- D. It was less effective than traditional systems.

35. What was unexpected for Rich Devaul?

- A. Communications problems became worse.
- B. Cell towers became more economical in a short time.
- C. Other companies would run similar projects.
- D. The Internet connections were getting faster.

Why do Hiccups Happen?

Most of us have been hic, hic, hiccupping since before we were born. Hiccups are the loud noises our throats make without us wanting them to. ___36___ But why do we hiccup, and how can we stop them?

According to WebMD, hiccups start in our diaphragm—which is the muscle between our lungs and stomach that helps us to breathe. When we breathe in, our diaphragm pulls down to let air into our lungs. ___37___ But if something irritates our diaphragm, it can cause it to spasm(痉挛). The spasm makes us inhale air suddenly. When this air hits our voice box, our vocal cords immediately shut, creating a “hic” sound.

___38___ Swallowing air while sucking on candy—or drinking fizzy drinks like Coca-Cola, or too much alcohol—can also cause us to hiccup. Emotions—like being nervous, excited, or even stressed—cause hiccups too.

But how can we get rid of them? ___39___ The official recommendations from the UK' s National Health Service (NHS) say that holding your breath for a short time is a good idea. Breathing into a paper bag is another option the NHS gives, as well as pulling your knees up to your chest and leaning forward, or very slowly drinking ice-cold water. ___40___ However, if your hiccups still haven't gone away after two days, WebMD says you' ll need to contact a doctor.

A. More haste, less speed.

B. It then relaxes when we breathe out again.

C. They can be funny or embarrassing depending on where we are.

D. Some of the reasons we hiccup include eating too quickly or too much.

E. They get in the way of breathing, eating, or sleeping comfortably.

F. Some people believe holding your breath and slowly counting to 10 can work. G. Stranger suggestions from the NHS include biting on a lemon or tasting vinegar.

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

When I was a little girl, I was given a bride doll by my father.

The doll was very beautiful with her soft blond hair curling gently around her face. Her small mouth, was curved in a shy smile, and her cheeks blushed. And oh, her eyes were blue, like clean lake water reflecting the summer sky. She wore tiny pearl-drop earrings and white high heels. Despite my own dark hair and eyes and olive skin, I knew that when I became a bride, I would look just like her.
