George Daniels lives in London. He is a watchmaker. His work continues the tradition of the English watchmakers of the 18th and 19th centuries. Today this tradition is almost dead. Daniels is the only man in the world who designs his own watches makes all the parts himself and then puts them together.

A Daniels watch is the product of his hands alone. One of his watches which is now in an American museum took 3500 hours to complete. He usually makes one watch a year. Each one is inscribed (刻) with "Daniels London" and costs about $10,000. Of course these are not ordinary watches—they are very beautiful and will last three centuries.

George Daniels has always been attracted by clocks and watches. When he was five he used to take his father's clock apart and put it back together again. At school he used to repair his teachers watches.

He is now internationally famous and many people would like him to make watches for them. But most of them will be disappointed. He chooses his customers very carefully indeed. It must be someone who understands the subject," he says "not someone who will leave the watch in the drawer and only show it to dinner guests."

6. Who is George Daniels?
A. One of the few who repaired watches in the old days.
B. The only man who collects old watches in the world.
C. One of the few remaining watch designers in the world.
