I've always dreamed of traveling the world, but like so many others,

I ended up on choosing to follow a career path instead of following my dream. I founded a company that I loved. Everything changed when I broke up with my girlfriend.

Sadness pushed me to my breaking point. It took me around three months after the break-up to finally make the decision to leave and travel the world. It was one of the hardest things I had ever done, but it was also the best choice I ever made in my life.

To this day, I still remember the day I called my parents, who are also deaf, to discuss my plans to travel the world. Both of my parents gave me their full support. They told me to go ahead and helped book my flight to Thailand.

I chose Southeast Asia as my first, and I was fortunate to spend it with my good friend Mic Dolan. We spent about six weeks backpacking through Thailand, Vietnam, and Cambodia, having fun with tiger cubs and riding elephants. There was a new adventure every day. We paused long enough in Thailand to get certified in scuba diving, which turned out to be my favorite part. After that trip, I flew to Europe to meet another friend, John Hathaway. In this part of the journey, John and I turned our travels into a full-time adventure and we shared all of our stories on the Vlog platform Seek The World.

Showing the people that I met and my readers who I am makes me more confident with what I want for my life. After meeting many deaf people, I realized that I have done one thing that everybody wants to do: I'm reaching my dream by breaking down communication barrier (障碍) and overcoming different challenges.

I always find a way. And I always make things happen. I didn't do that in the past; I'm grateful that I do now.

24. What did the author do after finally deciding to travel the world ?

- A. Breaking up with his girlfriend. B. Establishing his own company.
C. Sharing his plan with his parents. D. Thinking about what will happen.

25. What was the author's most beloved experience in Southeast Asia?

- A. Playing with animals. B. Diving with his friend.
C. Filming for his Vlog. D. Backpacking through countries.

26. What is the fifth paragraph mainly about ?

- A. The significance of this journey. B. The problems of hearing loss.
C. The advantages of sharing stories. D. The methods of making things happen.

27. How did the author feel at the end of his journey ?

A. Disappointed. B. Surprised. C. Interested. D. Satisfied.

In today's world, cultural heritage —a term Yale University President Peter Salovey referred to as “the record of humanity”— is increasingly under attack by threats ranging from climate change, theft, mass tourism, and war. Historic buildings, works of art, traditions, and even local languages are disappearing at an increasingly rapid rate.

Yale is leading a new organization, the Global Consortium for the Preservation of Cultural Heritage (GCPCH), to work on the preservation of cultural heritage. The first official meeting of the organization took place in Milan, Italy, which gathered 36 international university officials and experts from around the world to determine next steps for advancing GCPCH's mission (使命).

During the meeting, experts and officials determined that the mission of GCPCH is to share knowledge and to promote relationships between the parties that seek to protect various forms of cultural heritage worldwide. More specifically, GCPCH will create a map of education programs and field experiences, research projects, and funding sources.

The two-day meeting of GCPCH was hosted by Bocconi University.

It kicked off with an address by UNESCO Director-General Irina Bokova. “Knowledge-sharing gets all stakeholders (有利益关系者) involved at a global level,” said Bokova in her inspiring speech. “Together we need to strengthen the networks and build more bridges between all actors.”

Stefano Baia Curioni, vice-president of ASK Research Center of Bocconi University, commented on what an honor it was for Bocconi to host the meeting. “It is with great pleasure that we gather such a set of leaders who bring so many valuable points of view on challenges related to the preservation of cultural heritage,” Baia Curioni said. “We know how important the work of this body is to advancing our collective work, and are honored to support such efforts.”

28. Why is cultural heritage in need of protection

A. It is faced with threats from both nature and human.

B. It is under attack by some forms of illegal conduct.

C. Cultural heritage sites are disappearing in wars.

D. Some traditions are not identified as cultural heritage.

29. What did Yale do to help protect cultural heritage ?

A. It hosted a meeting. B. It formed a new organization.

C. It gathered some experts. D. It invited a UNESCO official.

30. What is the mission of GCPCH ?

Spreading preservation knowledge and bridging gaps in preservation efforts.

B.Organizing educational courses field trips and fund-raising activities.

C. Creating different forms of heritage protection and teaching them to students.

D.Sharing research findings and promoting communication between universities.

31. What does “address” in Paragraph 4 possibly mean

A.A meeting place. B.A formal speech.

C.An official report. D.An important mission.

D

Social media is taking over our lives: Facebook, Instagram, Twitter and now. TikTok. These social media platforms have changed from a way to stay connected to an industry where even kids can make money off their posts. While this may seem like another opportunistic innovation (), it’s really full of hidden false realities.

The median income (中位收入) recorded in the United States of America was about $63,000 in 2018. TikTokers can make anywhere from $50,000 to $150,000 for a TikTok brand partnership, and TikTokers with over a million followers can make up to $30,000 a —$360,000 a year. They are making more than the average person trying to feed their family and keep a roof over their heads simply by posting a 15-second video.

This is mad in more ways than one. Not only is it an overpaid “job”, it promotes undeserved admiration from viewers and a false sense of reality. Many of these famous TikTokers are still teens and the effects of fame at such an early stage in life might cause issues later in life, such as mental illness. Teens between the ages of 13 and 17 make up 27% of TikTok viewers, who can be easily influenced by what they are watching. They can put a false sense of self-value into who they look up to and what they represent money, fame, being considered conventionally attractive.

While TikTok has become a great tool for marketing, it's important to understand how this content affects young viewers. If we're constantly consuming content that shows us all we need to do to be successful is be conventionally attractive and post a 15-second video featuring a new dance, it will challenge our knowledge of what really makes someone successful and will in turn affect our individual work ethics (伦理). What about the people who miss birthdays and family holidays due to their jobs and aren't getting paid nearly as much as these TikTokers ?

Richard Colyer, president and creator of Metaphor, Inc, had his own at kids can make money for doing the latest dance moves in a 15-second video, but we should feed the minds of kids and not just their bank accounts. TikTok can be great if used properly. Money alone is not good; technology alone is not good and connectedness can be bad if it is only online.”

Again, as a fellow consumer of TikTok, I do enjoy the app when I have some time to kill and need a good laugh. I'm not against someone making a living on entertainment, but what does getting famous by posting a 15-second video teach young people

32. What does the underlined word “this” in Paragraph 1 refer to ?

A. Social networking. B. A job offered by TikTok.

C. Making money on social media. D. Staying connected to the Internet.

33. What does the author try to indicate in Paragraph 2 ?

A. TikTokers can hardly make ends meet.

B. Social media platforms like TikTok can make people overpaid.

C. Teens are wise to make a huge amount of money from TikTok.

D. TikTokers earn such a high income that they can support their family.

34. Which is the possible influence of TikTok on its young users ?

A. They are likely to develop false values.

B. They tend to live an adult life too soon.

D.They may stop believing other social media.

35.What did Richard Colyer stress according to his view

A. Contents of videos need checking before their release online.

B.We have a responsibility to supply teens with food for thought.

C.Young TikTokers should be banned from opening bank accounts.

D.Money and technology can be good if used properly by TikTokers.
