One day, George said to his grandma, "I wish I had a brother or sister."

Grandma said, "Maybe you can sponsor a child."

"What does that mean?" asked George.

"Well, you can use your pocket money(零用钱) to help a child in a poor country(贫穷的国家). Your money would help him or her buy food and clothes, and go to school," said Grandma. "Then you would have a brother or sister."

George liked the idea. With the help of Grandma, he wrote a letter to "Sponsor a Child". On February 24th, George received(收到) a letter. Inside was a picture of a 12-year-old boy named Niawat. He lives in Uganda, an African country.

There are some popular family videos that are being posted on Chinese social media these days. In these videos, a young child calls out to his or her mother or father; the parent enters the room smiling, turns around and call out to his or her own parent; the grandparent then enters the room smiling and calls out to his or her parent, the great-grandparent. This kind of family is called “four generation(一代人)” in China.

The “four generation” videos have not only touched foreign viewers, but also given them a deeper look into Chinese family values.

In most East Asian cultures, it is common for many generations of a single family to live together. This is called a big family. In most Western countries, most families are small families, or families that are made up of just children and their parents.

In Western culture, privacy(隐私) and independence(独立) are highly valued. Kids usually move out of the house after they turn eighteen. Many of them borrow money and work part-time jobs in order to pay for college. If they choose to continue living with their parents after growing up, it can be seen as a failure. Although family structures in the East and West may be different, the love between family members is common. That might be why the “four generation” videos have won so many hearts around the world.

95. In Paragraph 1, the writer tries to _____.
- A. describe big families in China B. describe happy families in China
C. introduce family videos on Chinese media D. introduce conditions of Chinese families
96. When do kids usually move out of their parents' house in Western culture?
- A. They enter a college. B. They can be independent.

C. They are 18 years old. D. They can do part-time jobs.

97. From the text, we can infer the “four generation” videos _____.

A. attracted many foreign viewers B. won love from many young hearts

C. showed Chinese family’s privacy D. made family structures change a lot

98. Which picture can be used to express the topic of the text?

99. The writer wrote the text to show _____.

A. family videos are popular throughout the world

C. people from all over the world love each other

D. four generations can be popular in western countries
