Mr. Wu is showing his classmates how to make pressed flowers (押花).

Start here

Step 1: Carefully pick a few flowers in a place where you are allowed. Do not take too many! Pick them later in the day and when the weather is fine so they're not wet from rain.

Step 2: Open a heavy book and lay a piece of blotting paper (吸水纸) inside. Place your flowers "face" down to keep the petals (花瓣) nice and flat. You could press some "sideways" for a different result. Then place another piece of blotting paper on top.

Step 3: Carefully close the book and place more heavy books on top. Put them in a warm place. Check on your flowers every few days and change the blotting paper if it's wet. It should take about 2—4 weeks for your flowers to fully dry.

Pressed Flower Works

Once they're dry, you can make some amazing art from your flowers. PVA glue is the best thing to stick them with.

◆Cool Cards

Stick pressed flowers to the cards and give them to your friends and family as presents.

◆Framed (框架的) Flowers

Organize them on paper and frame them! Double-sided glass frames look great, too.

◆Candle Holders

Use PVA glue to stick them to the outside of empty glass jars. Then add a few layers of PVA on top. Once dry, use as tea-light holders.

Tips

Large flowers such as bluebells or dandelions take longer to dry out. The flowers will keep their colour better if you press them soon after picking.

Resting her phone on a stand and making the light more suitable, 49-year-old Lyu Min started her livestreaming session — her daily job during the COVID-19 outbreak. Dressed in a qipao, a traditional Chinese dress, Lyu started the livestreaming session from her workshop at 10 in the morning, sharing the art of making Chinese knots with many handicraft(手工艺) lovers. Lyu, an inheritor(继承人) of the art of making Chinese knots, which is listed as an intangible(非物质) cultural heritage, became a livestreaming host.

“Though the sales of Chinese knots have dropped a lot, I'm still confident that I can get out of the trouble brought by the outbreak. I can make full use of this period to improve my skills and develop this traditional handicraft online,” she said. Lyu is quite new to the world of livestreaming, having bought all the necessary equipment(设备) after following her friends advice. She practises livestreaming every day and records a large number of educational videos. As face-to-face interaction is still impractical for many, even as the outbreak has been largely brought under control in China, she thinks livestreaming classes can meet more Chinese knot lovers' needs to learn the handicraft.

She has integrated the anti-epidemic spirit into her works, expressing the determination(决心) and confidence of the Chinese people to win against the COVID-19. “I love Wuhan, where I showed my works in 2019. Chinese knots are popular among many local people, and I made lots of friends there,” Lyu said. She designed a special Chinese knot to express her thanks to the medics who were sent to support Wuhan several months ago.

She has more than 200 followers right now. There are more and more Chinese knot lovers on her online platform. She is using a length of colored string and determination to keep this traditional art of Chinese knots alive online and help more people understand the culture.

Advertisements are everywhere, TV, newspapers, magazines and of course, on the Internet. Is advertisement really necessary? Billions of dollars are spent on it every year, so it must be important. After all, it’s a busy world. You have to advertise to get people’s attention to sell products!

Not every company thinks that way, however. The NO-AD company doesn’t advertise in traditional ways. It sells its products by word of mouth. In this way, they can save money and keep costs down, which makes their products cheaper for customers.

“Word-of-mouth advertising” happens when one person tells another about a good experience with a product or service. That next person then tells another friend, family member, or colleague (同事). And so a chain of information is created.

Usually, advertisers talk about how good their product is. Although they say things like “Studies show that our product is the best,” or “Everyone loves this product,” it can sound unconvincing. It’s much more believable to hear about a product from a family member or friend who has used it and liked it. Our loved ones’ opinions are very important to us, so we often listen to their advice about a product.

Word-of-mouth advertising has other advantages, too. It’s cost-effective (after all, it’s free) and a company doesn’t have to create a complex business plan to do it. Here is some advice for small businesses about word-of-mouth advertising.

- Be prepared to talk about your company at any time. You never know who you will meet. Always carry business cards.

- Only say good things about your company. Don’t say bad things about your competition.

- Help other companies by recommending people to them. The more you help others, the more good luck will come back to you and that’s good business.

36. Why do some companies spend lots of money on advertisements?

- A. To make their products very useful.
- B. To make the environment beautiful.
- C. To tell people the names of their companies.
- D. To attract people to their products.

37. Which of the following may be a word-of-mouth advertising?

- A. Telling people how good the product is on TV.
- B. Recommending the product you like to your friends.
- C. Telling people the product is the best in the newspaper.
- D. Showing people how popular the product is on the Internet.

38. What does the underlined word “unconvincing” in Paragraph 4 probably mean?

- A. Uncomfortable.
- B. Unimportant.
- C. Unbelievable.
- D. Unusual.

39. What might NO-AD companies do according to the passage?

- A. Create complex business plans.
- B. Say bad things about other companies.
- C. Provide cheaper products for customers.
- D. Help other companies by wishing them good luck.

40. The writer writes the passage to _____.

- A. find out the value of making advertisements
- B. introduce people a new way of advertising
- C. tell people to care more about advertisements
- D. show how to sell products by advertising on TV

The folk art form, kuaiban, which has a long history, can be performed by a group or a single person. With one or two pairs of bamboo clappers — a kind of traditional Chinese musical instrument in their hands, the performers tell stories in the local dialect (方言). These stories are usually folk tales or about social life.

Recently, Liu Jiming and Wan Yifu made and shared three short videos by using kuaiban which were viewed about 4 million times. As a result, Liu and Wan have gained more than 1 million followers on the Internet. They've created many new works to raise people's awareness. Some of their works are about the danger of drunken driving and food safety. They also write stories to show respect to people who make contributions, such as traffic policemen.

According to Liu and Wan, people can understand kuaiban pieces without difficulty. The stories told kuaiban pieces are close to people's daily lives. Thus, they consider that it is a fun way to introduce the Chinese folk culture through kuaiban. And what matters to them is that both young people and old people begin to know the charm of the art form, kuaiban, which may not be paid much attention to, compared to other traditional art forms.

Folk art forms, like xiangsheng, pingshu and kuaiban, share something in common. These traditional art forms show the beauty and value of traditional Chinese culture so they should be known by more people and get to more areas. Luckily, through the Internet, new performers who go on sharing kuaiban pieces like Liu and Wan are playing an active role. Hopefully these Chinese folk art forms will be alive with the times.
