When 23-year-old Eric Atienza graduated from college last year, he didn't have a job. Not wanting to give up his department and move back with his parents, he did what many young Americans are doing: he signed up with a temp agency, which places workers on short-term jobs. Temporary workers such as Atienza make up 20 percent of the US workforce. In 1985, 417,000 workers were classified as temporary help. In 2021, there are more than 2.5 million, according to Labor Department data.

Using temporary workers allows companies to increase or decrease the number of staff as their workloads change. It also allows the companies to avoid the costs involved in hiring and firing long-term employees.

Many temp agency owners and career specialists say temping is a good way for recent graduates to get experience. “Short-term jobs let the graduates try out different companies to find the best fit.” said Pegi Wheatley, owner of McCall staffing, a San Francisco temp agency.

But things don't always work out that way. “When I started temping, I had this idea that a temporary job could turn full time. It worked for a friend of mine, but that didn't happen for me.” said Atienza, who quickly became bored with his office work. Atienza stayed with the temp agency because he could earn US$10 an hour doing office work. Other short-term jobs, such as working as a store clerk or in a café, pay about US$7.

But there were trade-offs for the higher pay. Because in the US, health insurance is provided through employer, most temps are not suitable for workplace benefits. Atienza ran the risk that an accident or illness would land him in hospital with no ways to pay the bill. Other drawbacks, though less serious, still mean that temping for most graduates is exactly what its name implies—a temporary choice. Instability(不稳定), gaps between contracts, lack of vacation time and isolation (孤立) from other employees are often negatives.

“Temping gives the time to figure out what I wanted to do, because I could pay off my bills. But none of that came from the jobs themselves.” said Atienza who quit temping last month in favor of a full time job.

51. Atienza took a short-term job because _____.

- A. he graduated from college
- B. he liked to try out different companies
- C. he wanted to get more experience
- D. he couldn't find a long-term job

52. Which is NOT mentioned as an advantage of temping?

- A. It gives recent graduates experience.
- B. It enables employers to adjust their workforce.
- C. A temporary job will turn full time.
- D. Employers can reduce their costs.

53. Atienza stayed with the temp agency for some time because _____.

- A. he liked his office work
- B. he was satisfied with the pay
- C. his employer provided health insurance
- D. he hated gaps between contracts

54. What does the word “trade-offs” in Paragraph 5 probably mean?

- A. benefits
- B. advances
- C. gaps
- D. disadvantages

In an episode () of _____, Miranda goes speed-dating, only to discover that her law career is a turn- to the guys. When she says she's a flight attendant(空姐), however, suddenly she becomes an object of their fantasies.

Ray Fisman, a Columbia University economics professor, conducted a two-year study on Americans' dating preferences. “Men prefer women whom they rate as smarter, but only up to a told the New York Times. “It turns out that men avoid women whom they perceive (发觉) to be smarter than themselves. The same hold true for measures of career ambition: A woman could be ambitious, just not more ambitious than the man considering her for a date.”

This perceived bias (偏见) by some men against strong, successful women extends to other parts of social life, including politics. For instance, Hillary Clinton must face these bias as a presidential candidate (候选人).

The former First Lady appears in public wearing business suits and talking about national and international issues with a lawyer’s cool mind and sharp tongue. However, while her rival Barack Obama gets “fired up” , in the words of his fall campaign slogan, Hillary (希拉里) is careful to remain calm. She often says that she likes the kitchen, perhaps knowing that some may be uncomfortable electing a strong female president who doesn’t exhibit at least some of the more traditional “female” features.

According to the New York Times, women earning high salaries can also embarrass their male friends. For the first time, women in their 20s who work full time in several American cities –New York, Chicago, Boston and Minneapolis –are earning higher wages than men in the same age range. The new income superiority (优势) of young women is bringing them “forms of hostility (敌对) they weren’t prepared to meet” , Beveridge told the New York Times.

55.The story about Miranda in Paragraph 1 is used as _____.

- A. a conclusion B. an argument C. a leading-in D. a comparison

56.Based on the study on Americans’ dating preferences, an American man probably prefers to date

with _____.

- A. a lawyer
- B. a flight attendant
- C. a presidential candidate
- D. a full time worker in a NY big company

57. What do we know about Hillary Clinton?

- A. As a woman candidate, she faces the bias that women shouldn't be strong and ambitious.
- B. She is a strong female presidential candidate without traditional female features.
- C. Faced with Obama's campaign slogan, Hillary doesn't have a cool mind and sharp tongue.
- D. She is a good cook at home.

58. Which of the following statements is TRUE about the passage?

- A. Men think women, in their traditional ideas, should be smart and ambitious.
- B. An American man may prefer to date with a woman less smart and ambitious than himself.
- C. Young women with higher wages feel easy in their dating.
- D. Young women in their 20s earn higher wages than men in the same range.

I inherited from my parents a large amount of money, a strong healthy body and an excellent mind. I was naturally hard-working and soon I was extremely successful in my chosen work as a scientist.

This was not easy for me. The outside world saw Henry Jekyll, a serious and hard-working doctor. Behind this quiet character, however, was Edward Hyde, an active, fun-loving young man. Both of them were me. I thought about this for a long time and slowly I realized that every man had two sides of his character. They lived together in the same body.

"Was it possible," I wondered, "to find a drug that could give each side of my character its own separate face and body? "

After much thought and careful study I believed I had found the answer. I had read many scientific books and spent many hours in my laboratory, searching for the right mixture of chemicals to make my drug. At last I was ready.

One night, I mixed everything together and prepared my drug. I watched the smoke rising from the liquid as its color changed from red to purple and finally to green. Then, bravely, I drank every bitter drop.

I felt a violent sickness in my stomach and a terrible pain in all my bones. The room seemed to turn round and round and I trembled with fear. Then the fear and pain disappeared and a strange, sweet feeling took its place. Wild thoughts danced through my mind. They were not good, serious thoughts. Rather, they were the wild feelings of an evil and cruel stranger. But inside myself I felt younger, lighter, and more carefree(无忧无虑的) than ever before. "If this is pure evil," I thought, "I like it."

At that time, the good side of my character was stronger than the evil side. Henry Jekyll had his faults, but he was mostly a good, kind man. I cannot be sure, but I believe that is the reason why Edward Hyde was so much smaller than Henry Jekyll.

Later, I noticed that Hyde's appearance and manner had a strong effect on other people. Nobody could meet Edward Hyde without a feeling of dislike and fear. I believe I understand the reason for this, too. Everyone is a mixture of good and evil. Only Edward Hyde was pure evil.

I stood for a long time, staring at the mirror. "Am I trapped in this body?" I wondered. "If I am, I must leave this house before daylight. If I don't, I shall be arrested as a thief."

I hurried back to my study. With trembling hands I mixed another drug and drank it. Again I felt that terrible pain and sickness, but a few seconds later I found myself with the face and body
