Food documentaries are meeting the needs of a growing number of people in China. The viewers of them are attracted more by the food culture behind rather than wonderful plots (剧情), lively performances or beautiful music in other programs. While most focus on (聚焦于) popular restaurants or well-known cooks in cities, director Wang Shengzhi chooses a different way in his food documentary Taste of Home—he turns to people’s kitchens in small towns.

“Eating is to repair oneself. If you go to a busy restaurant and order several dishes, it can’t fix you.” Wang says. “From time to time, I remember that when I was a child, eating was such a simple thing that brought me great satisfaction. Why? Because food is made by families.”

Taste of Home was first shown through iQiyi and on Fujian South East TV on April 7, scoring 8.2 out of 10 on Douban so far. In each episode (集), it introduces two dishes from local families in villages. The viewers can follow the food’s preparation and cooking while learning the stories of the families and the food.

“Most of the food documentaries like to show something eye-catching. However, when cooking in a home kitchen, it’s not usual to see great skills of cooking. I want to record something simpler, just one dish and one bowl of rice. It shows viewers, especially the young generations (代), that eating is a simple thing.” Wang explains.

Wang also shows that there is not a right or wrong way to cook, as the way to cook can differ from family to family, but one thing they all have in common is that they are made with love.

Taicang Port was where Zheng He (1371-1435), the great Chinese navigator and explorer, started his voyages to the Indian Ocean during the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644). Today, over 80 shipping routes along the Yangtze River are connected to Taicang Port, making it a transit hub for domestic trade. The port also possesses 25 near-sea shipping routes that connect to countries and regions along the 21st Century Maritime Silk Road.
