What do Russian, American, Japanese and Chinese astronauts eat in space? Do they eat the same things as on earth or something totally different? Are these foods tasty? The t 71 may blow your mind

Russia

As the f 72 country to send astronauts into space, Russia started to develop space food since the early 1960s. Food that can be sucked (吸) was the earliest type of space food. but astronauts still felt hungry after eating them. Later, more satisfying foods like ox tongue, herring pie and chicken cutlets were then added to the menu to solve the problem.

Now Russian astronauts can enjoy a variety of food s 73 to on earth, such as black bread, honey cake, ham, quail, Polish pike, Russian cheese and sturgeon. Food is stored in special packages, and astronauts can eat them with a spoon or fork rather than suck them with a straw.

America

Fast food is the main food for American astronauts. The range of delicious food include sausage pies, spicy grilled fish, potato roast beef, butter bread, tempeh broth, tuna salad and drinks l 74 Coca-cola.

Japan

Japanese space food expresses their unique c 75. Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency displayed 29 different types to space food at an exhibition in Tokyo in June, 2007. Most of these are traditional Japanese food, including rice balls, tomato fish, curry noodles, mountain vegetables, beans. glutinous rice, and sweets.

China

Chinese space food has become more diverse and delicious in recent years. Food is a 76 differently in different stages of mission. For example, astronauts can eat porridge if they don't have appetite during their first few days in spaces while in the later stage, food with l 77 fiber (纤维) along with multivitamins will be brought in.

For the Shenzhou XIII astronauts, the recipe changed every five days during their 6-month stay in space.

D. Answer the questions (根据短文内容回答下列问题): (12分)

My _____

"The atlas (地图册) I grew up with was a hand - me - down from my brother, dog - eared Collins World Atlas. This became my favourite book, and I was touched that he thought I was grown - up enough to appreciate it. After wars, my atlas was considered incorrect and out of date and I had to buy a new one for school. But I still missed the well - used pages and old - book smell. I carefully tore (撕) pages out of my old atlas, and glued them on cardboard. My father helped me to cut them into jigsaw puzzles as gifts for my friends. Google search is an easy way to find various places, but I still prefer to search for exotic places in a real - turning atlas. One day it may be priceless!"

Rosemary Francis

"When I was 13, I wanted a horse of my own. Finally my parents softened to the idea and bought me a beautiful part - Arabian horse. To settle on a name, my father suggested I open our atlas to the page on Saudi Arabia, close my eyes and place my finger randomly (随机地) on the page. Bandar Shah (Royal Port) was a wonderful horse. "

Melanie Egan

"When I retired after 20 years with the same boss Reader's Digest, I did not expect to be given a gold watch. I certainly did not expect to be given a Reader's Digest Atlas of the World. But that is exactly what my co - workers decided I needed. For the next 15 years that atlas was used by my family to settle geographic arguments and plan trips abroad. Sadly, wear and tear forced its retirement, too. "
