A

It was the early morning of August 5, 1888, and her husband was still sleeping. She left a note for her husband on the table, saying that she and their two sons, Eugene and Richard, had already left to visit Pforzheim, Germany, 90 kilometers away. She purposely didn't mention her means of transportation. It wasn't until Carl Benz checked the workshop in his factory that he realized his family hadn't taken the train. His new invention was gone.

Bertha had just committed the world's first car theft. Her husband was a brilliant engineer who had designed the world's first automobile in 1885. However, without sharp business mind, his product wasn't going anywhere. Bertha understood what every modern business knows: marketing a product requires different skills than designing one. To provide a proof that the vehicle was reliable and could also master long-distance routes, she intended to drive with the motor from Mannheim to Pforzheim to show what it could do.

Once the three hit the road, they had to conquer novel problems. At 2.5 horsepower, they could not climb steep slopes without pushing it from behind. Going downhill, the car burnt out the brake shoes. Bertha stopped off at a cobbler(修鞋匠) and asked him to equip the brake shoes with a leather lining. In so doing, Bertha Benz became the inventor of brake lining. The fuel amount was also underestimated. Bertha made her first fuel purchase at the Stadtapotheke, where the store still proudly displays a sign of being the first gas station in the world.

Following the "first shock", as written in his memoirs, Carl felt an inner pride in his wife's daring "test drive". And sales soon stepped up with the spread of Bertha's daring trip. Today, drivers can still experience this part of Mercedes-Benz success story along the Bertha Benz Memorial Route between Mannheim and Pforzheim, just as the first woman driver did.

21. What's the purpose of Bertha's secret road trip?
- A. To save money on long-distance train fares.
 - B. To teach children how to drive automobiles.
 - C. To prove the performance of Carl's invention.
 - D. To apply the knowledge of modern business.
22. What does the underlined word "novel" in paragraph 3 mean?
- A. Slight
 - B. Common
 - C. Additional
 - D. Unexpected
23. Which of the following is the best title for the passage?
- A. A Pioneering Undertaking.
