But it _____ 40 _____ my mother. So one day, when she met Mrs. White at a parent-teacher meeting, Mum asked her why she never corrected my _____ 41 _____ and why she never said no to her child.

Mrs. White said, "The children are just beginning to get 42 about using words. Spelling and grammar can wait. We can't 43 that interest with a red pen." As it was a long time ago, my mother could only remember the main idea of 44 Mrs White said about my writing. However, I grew up learning to use words with loving care and 45 like that.

If Mrs. White had used her red pen more often, I 46 wouldn't be telling you about this now. Whenever I look back on those encouraging (鼓励的) 47 from Mrs. White, I feel they just look 48 real ones in the night sky—bright, shiny, and guiding me on my way somewhere. I do believe she was such a 49 teacher, who tried to use a red pen less to keep the joy, wonder and excitement in a child's 50.

Thanks to Mrs. White, I have no fear about writing. Also, I'm not afraid of any mistake in my life!

One Sunday evening, it was quite dark when old Stanley went for his walk. He was walking along the sidewalk. Suddenly, he saw a white car coming the corner at high speed. It was going too fast and crashed into a red car in the street where he was walking. He rushed up to the cars to see if anyone was hurt and needed help.

The two drivers were arguing (争论).
“You came around the corner too fast,” one man said.

“No!” said the driver of the white car, “That’s not true! Your car was parked in a wrong place.”

Stanley listened to their argument and then said the white car driver was wrong to drive too fast. The driver of the red car asked Stanley to prove (证明) he was right in court (法庭). Stanley gave the driver his name and telephone number.

Next Thursday morning, Stanley was asked to go to the court. The lawyer (律师) for the driver of the white car asked him a lot of questions about what he had seen. Then he asked Stanley how old he was.

“I’m eighty-two,” answered Stanley.
“Do you usually wear glasses?” asked the lawyer.

“Yes, I do,” answered Stanley.
“Were you wearing them on the night of the accident?” the lawyer asked.

“No,” replied Stanley.
Then the lawyer said, “Why should the court believe you? You are eighty-two years old, you were not wearing your glasses, and it was dark. How far can you see in the dark?”

Stanley thought about it for a minute. “Well,” he said, “when it is dark, I can see the moon. How far is that?”

C

Nowadays, the food that you buy comes from many different countries. Have a look in your fridge, cupboard, and fruit bowl and check the origins (来源) of the food. Perhaps there are apples from California, lamb from New Zealand, or potatoes from Egypt. You will probably be surprised how far food travels to get to your plate. This journey, from "field to plate", is called "food miles". A food mile is the distance (距离) that food travels from the farmer's field to the person who buys the food. Nowadays, food often travels thousands of miles to get to the consumer (消费者). Why is this, and what are the effects (影响) of these long distances.

Traditionally, farmers sold their food in the local market so the food didn't have to travel very far. The consumers also did not travel very far, because they went to their local market to buy the food. This was a good system (系统) for farmers and consumers. However, there were some disadvantages. For example, consumers could only buy food that farmers produced locally. In addition, they could only get food that was in
