Every year, wildfires destroy tens of thousands of square kilometers of forest land. People lose their homes. Some are hurt or even killed. Smokejumpers help to stop this.

Smokejumpers are special firefighters. Some fires are in hard-to-reach places, such as in the middle of a mountain forest. These firefighters jump from planes or are lowered into those areas by helicopters (直升机).

When they arrive, smokejumpers first check the land and decide how to fight the fire. Their main job is to stop the fire from spreading until other firefighters arrive. Smokejumpers use shovels (铲子) or axes (斧头) to clear the land of burnable things, like dry grass and dead trees. They carry water with them too, but not a lot.

Although most smokejumpers are men, more women are joining now. The most important factors (因素) are height and weight. Smokejumpers in the U. S., for example, must be between 54 and 91 kilograms. This way, they don't get blown away by the strong winds or get hurt when-they-land. Smokejumpers also need to know how to survive in the wild. In Russia, many smokejumpers know how to find food in the forest and can even make simple furniture from trees.

The work is dangerous, and the hours are long. But for these firefighters, smokejumping isn't just a job. They love being able to jump out of planes, fight fires and live in the forest. Alexi Tishin is a 28-year-old Russian smokejumper. He says, "This is the best job for tough guys (硬汉)."

14. When a smokejumper reaches a fire site, what is the first thing he or she does?

- A. Look for water.

- A. Flying into Fire
- B. Dangerous Jobs

Noise alert

Crying babies. Buzzing mosquitoes. Ringing car alarms. They are all annoying noises. But what's the worst? A recent survey lists the things we hate to hear.

The list of horrible noises had over 100 items. Several mobile phone ringtones appear near the top. Other noises include barking dogs, pneumatic drills (风钻), electric leaf blowers, loud snoring and banging noises early on a Sunday morning.

However, number-one on the list was the sound of a dentist's drill, "That just sends shivers down my spine," said one person. "After a visit to the dentist, I sometimes wake up at night with that sound in my head. It's horrible," said another." I've seen patients shaking with fear when I bring out the drill," explained a dentist. Of course, anyone who's actually been to the dentist and heard the sound will probably agree with that.

But there's some good news. A new device (设备) developed by experts at universities can cancel out the sound of the drill. The tiny gadget (小装置) allows patients to listen to music on an MP3 player while the sound of the drill is canceled out. However, patients are still able to hear the dentist's voice because not all sounds are filtered (过滤) out.

The theory behind it is fairly simple. Microphones are placed close to the dental drill. These pick up any sounds and change them into digital signals. Then, electronic filters cancel out any unwanted sound waves. However, the great thing is that this technology also allows others noises (such as the dentist's voice) to come through.

It's easy to use, too. Patients simply plug the device into their MP3 players. Then, via headphones, they can listen to music and hear the dentist's voice without being disturbed by the noise of the drill. Fantastic!

So, next time you go to the dentist, remember to bring your MP3 player.

18 What's on the top of the list of horrible noises according to the recent survey?

- A. Barking dogs.
- B. A dentist's drill.
- C. Electric leaf blowers.
- D. A mobile phone.

19. What does the underlined phrase, "send shivers down my spine" probably mean?

- A. make me feel sad
- B. make me very angry
- C. make me very scared
- D. make me very excited

20. The fifth paragraph mainly talks about _____.

- A. how the sound-filtering device works
- B. who invented the sound-filtering device
- C. what the sound-filtering device is made of
- D. how the sound-filtering device was invented

21. Which of the following statements is true about the new device?

- A. It can make the sound of a dentist's drill disappear.
- B. The device can prevent all noises from coming through.
- C. The device can change unwanted noises into pleasant music.
- D. With the device on, patients can hear nothing but music on their MP3.

"I wish you a good day, Uncle," said Dete, as she walked towards him, "and I have brought you Tobias and Adelaide's child. You may not recognize (认出) her, as you have never seen her since she was one year old." Hearing that the old man asked curtly. "But what has the child to do with me up here?" Dete made answer, "The child is here to stay with you. I have done my duty for these four years, and I have to go because the family I had waited on asked me to go to Frankfurt. You are the next of kin (亲属) to the child.”

As she uttered (说出) her last words, Uncle looked at her and said to her in a commanding voice, “Get back, and do not let me see your face again.” Dete did not—wait to be told twice. “Good-bye to you then, and to you too, Heidi,” she called.

As soon as Dete had disappeared, the old man went back to his bench. Heidi, meanwhile, was enjoying herself in her new surroundings.

“Come!” and the grandfather went before her towards the hut

“Bring your clothes in with you,” he asked her as she was following. “I shan’t want them any more” was her prompt answer. The old man turned and looked searchingly at the child, whose dark eyes were sparkling in delighted hope of what she was going to see inside. “She is certainly not wanting wisdom,” he murmured to himself. “And why shall you not want them any more?” he asked aloud. “Because I want to go about like the goats with their thin light legs.” Heidi asked, “Where am I to sleep, grandfather?”

“Wherever you like,” he answered.

Heidi was delighted. In the corner near her grandfather’s bed she saw a short ladder against the wall; up she climbed and found herself in the hay loft. “I shall sleep up here, grandfather,” she called down to him, “It’s lovely, up here. Come up and see how lovely it is!”

“Oh, I know all about it,” he called up in answer.

In the middle of the night the old man got up. “The child will be frightened,” he murmured. He mounted the ladder and went and stood by the child’s bed. Outside the moonlight was falling through the round window straight on to Heidi’s bed. She lay under the heavy cover lid, her cheeks rosy with sleep, her head peacefully resting on her little round arm, and with a happy expression on her baby face as if dreaming of something pleasant. The old man stood looking down on the sleeping child until the moon disappeared behind the clouds and he could see no more, then he went back to bed.

—— Excerpt from Heidi, written by Johanna Spyri

My husband Tyler and I made the decision to raise a guide dog puppy. After attending meetings with Anina Green, the club leader, I signed up eagerly. On April 27, we got our puppy, Escort. Holding him for the first time was amazing. He was soft, sleepy, and surprisingly large.

We attended puppy kindergarten weekly to learn how to train him. For the first six months, he was always on a leash. During the initial eight weeks, we stayed home, taught him commands and held his leash. We watched him grow and learn, his little tail wagging with excitement every time he finished a new task.

The guide dog club was like a family. We went on outings with other wonderful dogs. Escort’s first group outing was to the city museum. We also visited a shopping mall, a baseball game, a fire station, and the airport. With the club’s help, Escort became a dependable companion by eight months.

When he turned one, it was time to send him for formal training. We were in love with him but had to say goodbye. Seeing pictures of him with his new owner makes me happy. Knowing he’ ll improve her life fills me with pride. I’ ll always cherish the memories we made with Escort.
